Prologue

Now may the trials of which this book will tell,
Of all that our journeyings befell,
Be unto other pilgrims as a guide
Which they may keep forever by their side,
And may its buyer have no cause to say
His money is but lost or thrown away,
Is the hearty prayer of

The Valley of Ignorance

SO, it chanced that as a band of pilgrims, we met together at the edge of a low, green country, the name of which was called the Valley of Ignorance. We ventured forward, certain of us reading in books which had been given us for guidance; and, behold, as some read, they brake out with a lamentable cry, saying, "What shall we do?" Then a black-gowned host, called Dignity, whose knowledge of this country was abundant, did hasten to our aid[1], saying, "Wherefore do you weep?"

We enter the Valley of Ignorance

That they might ease our disconsolate condition, they led us into the midst of a great multitude. And now were we full of bewilderment, for here was continual struggling and howling. Indeed it was every whit dreadful, being utterly without order.

Our reception

Now, as we passed along, being lighter of heart, a band called Obstinate, which went before us a little way on the highway, did seek to seduce us from our sober ways.

The first meeting with Obstinate

Obst.: "What are the things you seek, since you leave all the world to find them?"

Pilg.: "We seek an inheritance of Knowledge, True Friendship, and the way to Life. Read it so, if you will, in our books."

Obst.: "Tush!" said Obstinate, "away with your books. Will you turn aside on the path of Dalliance with us or no?"

Pilg.: "No, not we, for we have chosen our path."

Obst.: "Come now, or you will repent."

Now Obstinate, in order to turn us pilgrims aside from our bounden duty, took our leader aside in parley, and bore her away out into the world. Whereupon we moved forward without her, pausing only to send out a band[2] that might bring her safely into our midst.

"Auto rides at night"

[1] M. Hill, 9/19/'12
[2] Davidson, 4/14/'13

Now all the pilgrims in our company were heavily laden with burdens, each having one marked M-A-T-H, and one C-O-M-P, and one G-Y-M. As we moved forward, we drew near to a miry Midyear slough, and some, being more heavily laden, slipped, and began to sink in the mire. At last, with the aid of others, all were got out, and rested where the ground was good. Thereat, being suddenly mindful of the pleasant prospect on every side, we burst into song[1] and were duly rewarded.

Those who do not look to their burdens are lost

And so we continued our journey with eager footsteps, until behold, there came a vision of Queen Guinevere[2] and her court, and a day of rejoicing in the open fields. Then, at last, our burdens were loosed from our shoulders, and slipped from off our backs, and we passed unburdened from the Valley of Ignorance.

We join in a day of festivity

The Red Rose

Come to the land where fairies dance.
  Ah, watch them lightly flit away,
Leaving deep in dreamy trance,
  A dryad, weary of her play!
Till a flaming Rose wakes her from rest
  By scattering posies in her hair,
And yearning dawns in the Dryad's breast
  To keep this Rose for a playmate fair.
Fauns and Dryads, Druids, too,
  In search of the fleeing Rose she sends,
But all they find, the woodlands through,
  Are Autumn and Winter, spirit friends.
Then sunshine brings in troops of Spring,
  And from their midst the red Rose darts
To dance with the Dryad in fairy ring
  And flood with joy the elfin hearts.

The Country of Conceit

AND so we went on a little way, until we came to that country which is called Conceit, a blithesome spot to gaze upon. As we looked and looked again at the pleasant prospect, our eyes reflected the wonder of it, and our faces gleamed with new satisfaction and content. Anon, being arrived at the topmost peak of this country, we thought to make manifestation of gladness for the burial of our chief burden.[1]

We are wondrous content

> Shall they who wrong begin yet rightly end,
> Shall they at all have Safety for their friend?
> No, no. In headstrong manner they set out,
> And headlong will they fall at last, no doubt.

For, of a sudden, we discovered that we were proceeding on the Mountain of Error, and in no wise could we escape save through the Valley of Humiliation, a lamentable place, wherein we lost our favorite play. We wept, we sighed, we oftimes chid ourselves, but still we passed on towards our distant goal.

[1] M. Harris, 11/3/'13

The Mountain of Error

Of a sudden, in the early hours of a spring morning, we espied a foul fiend coming over the field to meet us, the Giant Despair, hideous to behold; he was clothed with the glowing scales of a dragon, and out of his mouth belched fire and smoke. The giant made fast at us pilgrims, throwing flaming darts as thick as hail, wrestling with us, and giving us awful falls. All the time in the fight, the giant did make yelling and hideous roaring, while sighs and groans burst from the pilgrims. But at length, with the assistance of one old foe of the giant, who struggled slowly to our aid,[1] we felled the dire creature to the ground. Then out of the darkness came Hopeful, another pilgrim and friend, who showed us how to heal our wounds with Yellow Pencils and Jam, and we were comforted and worked gladly to make our escape.

The Giant Despair

As we were nearing the edge of the Valley, we lifted up our eyes and behold! a trim palace stood before us, the name of which was Beautiful; and it stood just by the highway side. Into this we entered, and found great work awaiting us. So being revived in spirits, we made haste, and went forward, eager to set foot in the lusty city of Vanity Fair.

Vanity Fair

NOW at this time we were divided among ourselves, and sought out six strange mountains for refuge. In spite of the wild animals and weird figures that dwelt herein, (for here we saw owls, bears, and mysterious twinkling lights), we dared brave their depths. In spite of the claims of these places, however, we gathered together at intervals, and in a body, passed into a town where a lusty fair was kept. And the name of this fair was Vanity. Herein we wandered from place to place, coming at last to a most promising by-way, called Quality Street. Here were quaint children to delight us, and a maid most dear to us, even when she was most unladylike.

We learn to know Mystery

From this street we wandered on until we came by chance to the Palace of Costly Pleasure[1], from which poured sounds of mad revelry, and strains of gleeful music.

We meet with Frivolity

> Through all the space no room was there,
> And many men and little air.

When sometime was agone we entered upon Prating Row, meeting with one Talkative, and another, Loquacious, with whom we discoursed concerning the government of cities. And we liked it wonderful well, for our speech was full of conviction.

Later we came to a place in the fair that was full of fires, where we met with a certain band called Diffidence, who gave us small cheer, and were even heard to remark "This is utterly without savor".[2] And though they ate of our food and wore of our raiment, they knew not what they did. So we turned from them sadly, and went on our way. But once again we met with this Diffidence, making numbers on the greensward. Being grieved by their deadly calm, we took from them a dot[3], which made them exceeding sore.

Diffidence is all but burnt; but escapes

As the road leading from this town came in sight, we chose new leaders[4] for the last lap of our journey, and leaving the delights of Vanity Fair behind us, strode forth toward Beulah Land.

Beulah Land

AND now, at last, we were arrived at the land of Beulah, the pleasantest spot we had seen for many a day. And behold, at our right hand, stood a gorgeous palace, in the center of which was a court, wherein could be heard continual babbling of voices; and the bells did so ring, and the noises so constantly sound that we could not sleep.

We arrive at Beulah Land

And though we found in this land of Beulah certain black robes, which must be worn by all those who enter the country, we soon grew accustomed to them. Now, in particular, it behooved us Pilgrims to advance in dignified ranks, for our progress was remarked by attentive groups, who marvelled at our self composure; and especially did one large band clothed in fresh green color, look upon us with respect and reverence. Even to ourselves we were a source of wonderment; and scarce did we recognize our best companions when they appeared in this unfamiliar raiment.

We put on new garments

And before we had progressed very far, we did bestir ourselves to choose from the trusted group, Discretion, a certain tall and kindly one, who forthwith allied himself to our band. Delighting us, he first appeared, arrayed like unto ourselves, and yet a little different, for his black mantle did rustle, and his headpiece was of wondrous shape and size. Encouraged by his genial smile, we undertook, as in former years, great feats of skill with Diffidence and other ambitious persons. Cheered on by gay red hats and rousing songs, members of our band leaped to the front, and with great glee bore off silver trophies and blue letters of merit.

Step by step we passed on, till at last we were allowed to enter that large hall where once we, and other victims, had exercised with neither grace nor pleasure, but where now bright Gaiety awaited us.

Music and dancing prevail

And with us were male companions, carefully chosen, and bid for the occasion. Nor was this the only time in which we dared to dance, for other doors were open to us, and a curious old red building filled with mandolin music and choral singing.

Finally, like a vision, advancing down a sloping hill, came the Spirit of our College, all blue and gold against the green, to bid us good-bye. And on another day, not far removed, came certain dignitaries who saluted us and gave to each of us a roll with a seal upon it, as a sign that we had done all our journey. In celebration thereof our band held one last gay supper; and some few of us were so joyful that they even ran around the banquet table, thereby causing much consternation among the less venturesome. So, in the midst of jollity and good fellowship, we said our good-byes to one another, and each alone set out to seek new adventures.

A Vision of Wellesley

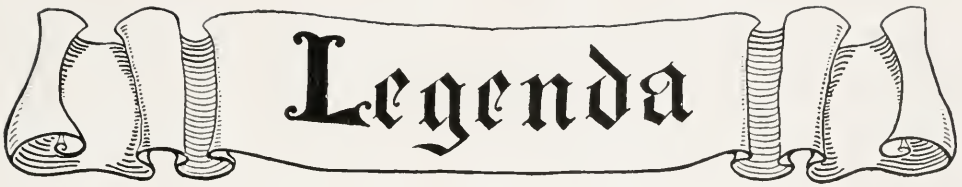
AS Springtime cometh to the year, so came the Spirit of Progress, dancing, free, into the life of womankind. Down from the blue hills of the Ideal she summoned the Vision of the College Beautiful, and those fair three, Love, Loyalty, and Service, that they might help her form—Wellesley. And Wellesley, lowly at first, and veiled, her beauties only guessed at thro' the promise of her eyes, sprang into rosy radiance of life when came unto her Faith, clear youth and bright, with all his pure-eyed train of Virtues.

Faith danced beside her; she grew strong, the awakening Wellesley, learned to laugh at stiff Convention, Ignorance, and Prejudice, the mother of the Doubts and Little Fears that sting and hamper growth. Strength, Honor, Wisdom, and the love-joy Play came running down to join her, as she danced with Christian Faith. And Wisdom brought along the Sciences of stars, and flowers, and Chemic Change; History he called, Philosophy and Music, Poetry, Art, and all the rippling tongues of distant lands. Harmony of many parts moving as one, Wellesley began to know.

Rounding to the fullness of the Vision was she, like the great-orbed-swinging moon, when lo! flaming, smoke-veiled, whirled the Fire upon her. Her heart like summer dust, she sank; and Faith stood by with bowed, sad head—they two alone to face disaster. At last, the evil Fire, triumphant, flickered out; and in his place, Grief and Despair crept up.

But Faith, raising his head, caught far away a golden gleam that ran, half dancing, ever nearer, like sunshine on the Lake. Faint arms Wellesley stretched out, moving to meet the gleam, and those twin sorrows, Grief and dim Despair, sprang out all gold and white with promise, generous, to greet—the Coming Era. Strong now to try the future, with her band, Wellesley looked straight ahead. And mirrored in the Vision's steadfast eyes, she saw—herself.

MARGUERITE SAMUELS, 1916.



"They came to us, weary with unceasing labor,
And laid before us the fruits of their toil."

If you would wander farther yet,
And promise not to cry "alas",
Turn yet more pages o'er and read
The follies of the Pilgrim Class.

"Well, gentle Friend, wouldst thou yet foolish be?
Here are some simple words to gladden thee."

"Are you taking good care of your cold?"
"Indeed I am! I've had it six weeks and it's as good as new!"

HEARD ON FIELD DAY

Stout Senior: "I'll wager a Bailey's sundae that I can run around that field in less than a minute. Who has a stop watch?"
Sympathetic Friend: "You don't want a stop watch. Where's a calendar?"

AT PROM

She (making conversation): "I can't seem to arrange my curriculum."
He (blushing): "Oh, that's all right! It doesn't show."

He: "I just love to dance!"
She: "Why don't you learn?"

"What did you say your age was?" he remarked between dances.
"Well, I didn't say," returned the girl, "but I've just reached twenty-one."
"Is that so," consolingly, "What detained you?"

"My dear, does your fountain-pen always leak that way?"
"Indeed, not! Only when it has ink in it."

Lecturer in Philosophy 9: "The more I look into myself the more of an It I find."

Sh! Tower Court is a gossipy place! Even the pipes communicate.

Officious Senior: "I wish something could be done to avoid the dreadful confusion and jam the day before vacation."
Clever Freshman: "Why don't they close a day earlier?"

After two years Bible:
Sunday-school pupil: "Teacher, what is the Passover?
H. S. '16: "That was when the Israelites passed over the Red Sea."

She (on being introduced): "Are you '16 or '17?"
The Other (with dignity): "I am twenty-one."

When Mary Eliza Clarke was teaching at Northfield, one of the pupils was heard to ask:
"What does the 'B. B.' on her sleeve mean?" And her chum answered:
"Oh, that't the degree she got at Wellesley."

AT CHRISTMAS VESPERS

Senior Usher in the balcony: "Girls, please pass away quietly and meet your friends below."

Wellesley: "We always consider a play from the highest point possible."
Harvard: "Oh, I see—the 'Peanut Gallery.'"

HEARD IN A KITCHENETTE

"This match won't light."
"That's funny! It was all right a minute ago."

IN MISS DAVIS'S ELECTRIC

Miss Hart: "Can't we go faster, Miss Davis?"
Miss Davis: "Yes, Miss Hart, we can, but I dislike to leave the car."

Connie: "—!—!—??—*—!"
Sympathetic Onlooker: "What's the matter with your automobile?"
Connie: "I don't know, but I think it must be the exasperator."

IN MARY HEMMINGWAY

"Did you take a shower?"
"No, is there one missing?"

Unhappy Freshman returning from gym: "Oh dear! Every bone in my body aches."
Optimistic Junior: "Oh well, you ought to be glad you're not a herring."

LAMENTATION

My fountain-pen! What dismal fate,
What evil star, unlucky date,
Have snatched thy presence from my side?
Beloved one, thine aid desired,
How strange my hours and desolate!

My fluent lines I did create
With thee (nor too much expurgate),
On thy repleteness I relied,
My Fountain-pen!

A sorry tale I could Narrate
Of how I sought thee, all too late;
And friends with frantic questions plied.
No use; My grief unsatisfied
Another must alleviate,
My fountain-pen.

THE bare assertion of the manufacturer cannot make reputation for his product, no matter how persistently repeated, or widely advertised, and reputation, therefore, is necessarily the consensus of opinion of those who have repeatedly used the product and had the opportunity to compare it with similar products of other makers. When the consensus of opinion of many users is that a certain product is the best obtainable, it means that the manufacturer has "made good," and it is said that "they have a great reputation," but is it not a fact that the manufacturer only made a good product and that it was the product that made the reputation? Dill & Collins Co. have for years, patiently and persistently directed their brains, energy and money to the improvement of their product, and their name is now synonymous with the best in printing papers, both with and without a coated surface, simply because printers, publishers and advertisers have learned by actual experience that with them they obtain the most satisfactory results.

Dill & Collins Co.'s papers are sold at a fair manufacturing margin of profit, it can therefore safely be inferred that any competing product offered as "just as good" is either misrepresented or that the seller is a philanthropist who disposes of gold dollars at ninety cents.

Moore's makes its mark
at a touch

Don't shake a Moore to start it —just touch it to the paper. For when a Moore is closed, you know, the pen is down IN the ink—kept moist and free from drying. And it comes up ready to write at a touch—and keep on writing smoothly. Can't leak because it shuts up bottle-tight. 127 styles from $2.50 up.

Shut Your Eyes and Choose.

"Zaire!" exclaims the eminent French chef, as he proudly exhibits his splendid Cherry Jell-O dessert, "can anybody beat zat?"

"Well, perhaps not 'beat it,'" the lovely young housewife says, demurely, "but what do you say to this?"

What is there to say? Fact is, any woman, whether she can cook at all or not, can make of the same delicious and beautiful desserts that are made by the greatest chefs and cooks, for she doesn't cook it, but only adds boiling water.

JELL-O

And the cost is only 10 cents.

Jell-O is really a very wonderful product and many women will tell you that they are fascinated by the charm of the "easy Jell-O way."

There are seven different pure fruit flavors of Jell-O: Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Peach, Chocolate. Each, in a package by itself, 10 cents at any grocer's or general store.

A beautiful new Jell-O book tells of a young bride's housekeeping experiences. It has splendid pictures in colors and will interest every woman. It will be sent to you free if you will send us your name and address.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD CO., Le Roy, N. Y., and Bridgeburg, Ont.

A tightly sealed waxed paper bag, proof against moisture and air, encloses the Jell-O in each package.
